The Sermon on the Mount is the first of five great discourses in the Gospel of Matthew. Jesus begins this discourse with the well-known Beatitudes, one of which is: "Blessed are the peacemakers, they shall be called children of God."

Making peace is about establishing, maintaining and nourishing right relationships: right relations with God, with self, with others and with the created order.

Peacemakers strive to create places in which evil, violence and injustice are diminished and righteousness, healing and justice are increased. They are committed to making peace even in the face of misunderstanding, resistance and hostility.

Peacemakers work for integration, health, wholeness and holiness, especially with the people with whom they interact every day.

Francis de Sales gives us much food for thought—and action—when it comes to making peace. He wrote: "We must in all things and everywhere live peacefully. If trouble, exterior or interior, comes upon us, we must receive it peacefully. If joy comes, we must receive it peacefully, without a throbbing heart. If we need to avoid evil, we must do so peacefully, without disquieting ourselves; otherwise, we may fall as we run away and give time to our enemy to kill us. If there is peace to be promoted, we must do that peacefully; otherwise, we might commit many faults in our hurry. Even our repentance itself must be made peacefully." (Letters to Religious, p.62)

Of course, we know from human history (and from our own personal experiences) that peacemaking seems to bring with it its own share of difficulty. Peacemaking is not only its own reward, sometimes it is its own punishment. Ever heard the expression that "no good deed goes unpunished"? The truth of the matter is that trying to bring about peace brings about trouble of its own.

In order to shed light on this truth, St. Francis de Sales offered the following observation: "Our Lord is called the Prince of Peace; therefore, wherever Christ is absolute master, all is peace. Yet, it is true that before giving peace he causes war, separating heart and soul from our dearest, most intimate and most common affections (Mt 10: 34), such as inordinate love of self, confidence in self, complacency in self, and the like. Now when our Lord separates us from such fondly cherished passions, it seems as if our hearts have been flayed alive. Nevertheless, notwithstanding all this writhing in spirit, it is not without peace. So long as we keep our will nailed to God's will, while in no way repudiating our obligations nor the brave fulfillment of them, we do not lose peace. To be at peace amid wars and to live in sweetness amid bitterness is to be truly Prince of Peace." (Letters to Religious)

To be sure, then, peace is not the same as the absence of conflict or difficulty. It is about remaining grounded in the love of Christ, who is the source of all true and lasting peace.

Peace is something for which all of us deeply hope and long. Yet, peace sometimes seems so very elusive.

How can we effectively promote peace for ourselves and others? Francis de Sales offered this advice: "Let us do three things and we shall have peace. First, let us have a thoroughly pure intention of desiring the honor and glory of God in all things. Second, let us do the little we can for that end and according to the advice of spiritual companions. Third, let us leave to God the care of all the rest." (Letters to Religious, p. 60)

Live in peace. Walk in peace. Share it with others...peacefully.
